Dear Traveler,

This is a special message for all parents, grandparents, or anyone else that has ever contemplated traveling with kids, teenagers or young adults.

By now there are fewer and fewer people who still choose to deny the fact that the earth's climate is changing. Some consider this to be one of—if not the—most critical issues of our time. So, I will not go on and on about that as you understand this as well as I do. What I am going to discuss with you in some depth is an opportunity—an opportunity to experience the Arctic this summer with the young people in your life. Together you will see extraordinary wildlife, scenery, cultures and do so in the company of remarkable naturalists, scientists, historians, divers, photographers and anthropologists, aboard state-of-the-art ships built to explore these regions.

The North is where we can most clearly witness the intersection of climate change, people, and animals. Svalbard. Iceland. Greenland. The Canadian Arctic. These are wondrous and remarkable places. You cannot visit them and not be changed. They are so powerful, so beautiful and teach us so much.

So, here's the deal—bring the youngsters as our guests at no cost (although we have to put some conditions around that which you can review on the following pages). I would love to see as many youngsters as possible joining us, because, let's face it, nature is the greatest common denominator between generations.

There are 12 unique Arctic voyages for your consideration. I am sorry this has come to you a bit late as I know many of you already have plans. The reality is that world events, including having to revise itineraries involving Russia for example, have led to this the opportunity.

Parents, grandparents, uncles, and aunts, I hope you will take me up on this invitation. If you do, you will love the experience as much as the youngsters and you will share an experience that will stay with you for a lifetime.

Sincerely,
